Palliative Care is accessible to all.

 vision is to build the interprofessional team with the leadership and their complementary care providers.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and certifies yearly.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.

 Why Palliative Care

 95 per cent of Canadians who could have benefited from palliative care, but only one in four have access to palliative care.

 There is a need for increased capacity throughout the national strategy on end-of-life care outlines the importance of education, training and sharing best practices to ensure health care professionals have access to palliative care.

 The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care cares for dying patients.

 A need for increased education and training is required to address future staffing.

 Palliative care is accessible to all.

 To ensure evidence-based high-quality care, the capacity of future health care professionals needs to be built. The Freeman Centre for the Advancement of Palliative Care provides training in academic and community palliative care.

 Students/Residents every year.

 are proud to reach, address and mandate are.

 1,200 Nursing students and 800 Medical are.

 Teaching palliative care professionals, we've expanded the palliative care in community palliative care practice.